n/a	n/a	The appointments of the sergeants should be considered and analyzed, specifically whether it is appropriate to have individuals politically appointed to oversee security. Annual professional reviews of sergeants should be standard practice, with surveys from building occupants included as part of the review process. There should be a standard protocol for building occupants to share concerns about interactions with sergeants, along with a protocol for following up and addressing those concerns. If there is no confidence in the sergeants, money spent on security will have little return on investment. Confidence in the individuals responsible for implementing security measures is critical to any new measures the Committee enacts.
